City Council adopts austere budget; Sacramento actions could force further cutbacks

At the June 17th Lemon Grove City Council meeting, the Council worked its way through the usual agenda items, stopping along the way to discuss some more than others, and then, quickly accepted the Proposed General Fund Budget for 1991-92 as the preliminary budget for 1991-92.

As City Manager Jack Shelver explained, the proposed budget is a lean one that "barely holds the line on city services." With the city being squeezed by efforts of the Federal, State and County governments to either reduce revenues to the city or increase fees or other costs to the city, the city finds itself in a very tight position.

However since there are still too many unknowns - such as whether or not the courts will throw out the County's booking fees, how the State will solve its deficit, and more (totalling about $240,000), the city is going to take a wait and see attitude, believing that they will have to come back in the next month or two and fine tune the budget.

The proposed budget reflects an increase of 1.6% over the previous year, which, when factored for inflation, represents a decrease in service level. A recap of changes by department showed the following:

City Council up $1,265 because of increased benefit costs.

City Manager Department down $6,645 because of the recent management reorganization which eliminated the Assistant to the City Manager position and added a City Council Services Clerk.

Administrative Services (previously called Finance Director/City Clerk Department) is down $36,227 due to the reorganization (which eliminated the City Clerk position).

Fire Department increased by $14,585 due to benefit increases, despite other severe cuts - including most capital items.

Law enforcement is up $120,000 due primarily to an increase by the County of 6.8% for the same services provided during the past year. By eliminating the position of a second Community Services Officer, which was authorized last year but never added, the city can keep the Sheriff's increase to $109,000. However the County Animal Control increased their charges by 20% for the same services provided last year - an increase of $13,000.

Public works is budgeted a decrease of $172 for 1991-92.

Community Development is down $13,798. This decrease will be achieved by deleting a technician position (which is currently vacant), which will result in a lower level of service to the public in getting answers to zoning problems.

The City Attorney budget is being reduced by $10,000 because of fewer anticipated zoning cases to prosecute.

Non-Departmental is budgeted to increase by $38,000 primarily because of a $53,300 increase in insurance. To offset this, reductions were made in the budget for the city newsletter (from $10,000 to $5,000) which will be published two times instead of five; Old Time Days (from $8,000 to $6,000 in cash contribution, but the city employees provide additional man-hours); Community Arts Council ($10,000 to $0); and Miscellaneous Promotions (from $5,700 to $3,700).

The Recreation Department budget will remain the same as last year, but because of increases in benefits, supplies and services, some fees will have to be increased, and the number of trips will be reduced. In addition, the annual Fun Run is being cut - to achieve a savings of $5,000.

The city's General Fund revenue is budgeted to increase from $5,199,000 to $5,708,000. The increase will come partially from $50,000 increase in property taxes (due to higher valuations on property sold or improved - not a tax increase), $75,000 in Franchise Fees, $40,000 by imposing a business license collection charge, $25,000 by raising the Transient Occupancy Tax from 6% to 10%, increasing Redevelopment Administration Fees and also by taking the carry-over Fund Balance into General Fund revenues for the first time.

While accepting the proposed budget which eliminates city funding for the Community Arts Council, the City Council agreed to listen to a forthcoming proposal by the Arts Council without prejudice.

John Pipes, chairman of the Old Time Days Association thanked the city for the $8,000 contribution last year and said that they will work to raise more funds from other sources. Pipes was thanked by the Council for the good job the Association did with the 1991 Old Time Days.

Sheriff's report details growing gang menace

by Lindy Magner

County Sheriff's deputies thought they were seeing a rise in gang activity in the areas they patrol, but they didn't have the statistics to prove it - until now.

Those statistics, gathered by a deputy through the use of a data base which logs all arrests and crimes committed in the County, show the Spring Valley/Lemon Grove area is significantly impacted by gang activity - only Vista ranks higher in the number of known gang members. The study looked at all cities and areas which are served by the Sheriff's department, excluding those cities, such as San Diego, Chula Vista, El Cajon and Oceanside, which have their own law enforcement.

In Spring Valley, there have been 172 contacts between the Sheriff's department and those claiming gang membership; in Lemon Grove, there have been 51 such contacts. Countywide, 4,500 gang members operating in the Sheriff's jurisdiction were identified from 241 different gangs (104 which are from Los Angeles and 17 which originate in Mexico). The study also looked at the kind of crimes gang members were most often committing, finding that battery ranked the highest, followed by narcotics and alcohol-related incidents, robbery, and assault with a deadly weapon.

"There had been a lot of discussion here in the department about gangs," said Dan Greenblat, an assistant to the Sheriff, "San Diego City has a gang suppression unit, and we were concerned that possibly there was a migration of gang members into our areas, chased out from the city."

Yet, the high numbers were "a surprise to everyone," according to Greenblat, and have resulted in the drafting of a Gang Suppression Unit for the Sheriff's department.

"A deputy came to us, saying he didn't think the information we had on the gangs was reflective of the situation, so we sent him out to research it," said Greenblat, explaining that SANDAG's (San Diego Association of Governments) ARJIS data base was used to "give us a snapshot of gang activity."

According to Det. Robert Guaderrama of the Lemon Grove Sheriff's station, the number of known gang members (those claiming a gang) is steadily increasing, especially among those claiming affiliation with the Spring Valley Locos (SVL). The other Spring Valley gang is the Eastside Piru (ESP).

As of early June, the Sheriff's department had documented 86 SVL members, mostly through "field contacts," and that number has increased even in recent weeks, said Guaderrama. Field contacts involve no arrest, but are simply recordings of those claiming gang affiliation and willing to give their names (usually their gang nicknames) to deputies, he explained.

What is more bothersome to Guaderrama is that the SV Locos are beginning to attract members from outside their territory, which has traditionally been South Spring Valley, as well as attract members from other ethnic groups - the SV Locos have traditionally been an Hispanic gang, he said.

"We are starting to see whites and blacks mixing in the Hispanic gangs as well as membership from outside the area. It has us concerned that we are seeing SVL graffiti in the north around Bancroft and Kenwood where the gang doesn't hang out, but probably there's a member who lives in that area; and recently, I got a call from Chula Vista, and they are seeing SVL graffiti in their city," he said.

"Our major concern is that gang membership from outside the area will cause more gang violence, with one gang crossing out another gang's graffiti," he said, adding that graffiti from San Diego gangs has been seen in Spring Valley.

The major concern with gangs crossing into another gang's territory is that challenges to "turf" will result in violent retaliations such as drive-by shootings.

"In Spring Valley in the last year, there have been ten reported drive-by shootings, but these generally go unreported unless someone is hit, so I think the numbers are much higher," he said.

"These guys aren't very good shots - they shoot recklessly -

B-Words

Personal comments of Councilman Bob Burns

Some comments on my references to "town characters" has prompted this piece on one whom I consider a friend, at least, up until publication-time.

The best single term that jumps into my mind in describing this old gentleman is "irascible." My Thesaurus lists some twenty synonyms such as "fractious, cantankerous and testy." None of them really hit the nail on the head, exactly, so I will refer to him in the most realistic and honest terms I can ... Bill Fetty.

As a roofing contractor, Bill is the oldest established business of its kind in Lemon Grove, and his work is as good as his temperament is bad. He has re-roofed my Veterinary Hospital twice, and my home, once, over the years and to my complete satisfaction. I know of many others who have used his service with the same results. He is probably as well-known in this capacity as he is for his snide remarks and crusty conversation in the various doughnut shops and lunch counters in Greater Lemon Grove. He is a perennial gadfly to governments of all levels, and has shot me full of holes many times with his opinions and political barbs, but he rarely is without someone to engage in spirited conversation with, wherever he goes. I thought that I had him recently, but now realize that he will never let me off the hook.

It seems that during a recent rain, the roof began to leak at my building on North Avenue, and being still under guarantee, I called him to check out the problem. The water was pouring through the ceiling at only one spot. He clamored up onto the roof and told me that he could find no place where water was permeating the roofing material, which was only about five years old. The water was coming in - a steady stream - and we noted that the flow was increasing even when the rain had stopped. "It must be a faulty roof job, Bill," I said, and insisted that he do something about it. He called his son to climb the ladder and inspect the roof with younger eyes, and his report was the same - no leak. All of this time, the water had been cascading through the ceiling, especially over near the outside wall of the building. Bill then suggested that we look up through the ceiling crawl space with a flashlight to see if we could locate where it was coming through the roof.

Jumping over my embarrassment, and not wanting to dwell on my on discomfiture, it turns out that a copper water line had been tapped into for a drinking water dispenser before I purchased the building. It had been disconnected and plugged with a galvanized steel plug. From 1955 to 1991, we were unaware that electrolysis was disintegrating that plug. It chose precisely the moment of one of our very infrequent rain showers to let go. So, under a perfectly good roof, the water line was leaking profusely.

Back home in Michigan, when I was young, the local sportsmen used to have an annual dinner prepared by their wives, consisting of huge platters of roasted crow, which abounded in the local farm lands. I never attended, nor ever tasted crow, but every time I meet up with Bill Fetty, I get a very acrid and peculiar taste in my mouth ... which must be it. No amount of apologies seem to satisfy him, and probably, never will. His motto has always been that he guarantees all of his roofing work "until the first rain," but I would like to publicly state that he does good work. Despite his "waspyish, nettled, bilious, grumpy, etc." demeanor, Bill Fetty is a good roofer, and is a nice guy, no matter how much he would have everyone think otherwise. I am pleased to have him as a friend, and recommend him to anyone whose roof is truly leaking. Is that enough, Bill?

Notes from the East

Here, in Philadelphia, at a meeting of the American Public Transit Association (APTA), on behalf of MTDB and our San Diego trolley, we were met by, who else, but "Ben Franklin."

Looking very good for his 200-plus years, he informed us that 1991 is the 200th anniversary of the Bill of Rights.

There are many celebrations on tap for this year, in keeping with the birthday of the "Rights" all the way from senior rights to tourists rights, and even, little kids rights. The yellow ribbons and American flags of all sizes abound, and far outnumber the anti-war signs, but all are represented. Old Ben, with long, wispy hair, knee britches, cane and square glasses, was everywhere to welcome and show us around. We saw the actual chair that Washington sat in, and the room where both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution were signed.

Touching the Liberty Bell was a real thrill, and the crowd of many colors around it gave rise to our guide's remark: "This looks like Baskin Robbins."

"Philly" has a long list of firsts to its credit: first capital, first bank, first supreme court, and so on. Independence Hall is the center of it all, and really, the structure where America was conceived, as well as born.

Our hotel room looks out on the cathedral, St. Peter & Paul, where we enjoyed mass our first morning here - a magnificent church.

As the transit organizations meet from all over the U.S. and Canada, a bipartisan transit reauthorization Bill (S1194) has passed the Senate. Funding levels of $3.8 billion in fiscal year '92, growing to $4.7 in FY '96, have been authorized. Flexibility provisions are being proposed to allow local discretion in the use of highway funds for transit which bring matching ratios closer together.

These proposals promise to bring a better use of available funds to work highways and public transit to better advantage of both - and, especially, the public. Clean air standards and traffic congestion are obligations that must be addressed and met in the future.

Public transportation has a long history here in the East, and tours of the facilities show off the movement of tremendous numbers of people. Commuters on public transit are more of a way of life on this coast than in our Southern California lifestyle. However, everyone is impressed by our San Diego trolley system and envious of our efficiency, appearance and, especially, our fare box recovery figures which approach 100 percent.

We thought a report to S.D. might be in order.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

Any civilized nation with the idea that well-meant intervention in the Middle East will have long-term positive results is doomed to see that idea fail. This truism, borne out by most of recent history, is once again facing us unavoidably in the aftermath of the Persian Gulf War.

With the last of the many victory parades mercifully fading into the past, what is left is the unpleasant sight of a series of barbaric "war tribunals" in Kuwait, an Iraqi army still far too powerful and the much-anticipated Mideast "window of opportunity" slammed shut.

In Kuwait, pitiful, unrepresented non-nationals are being sentenced to penalties far beyond the scope of their crimes, with no real court procedure and no hope of appeal. And, while fires still rage and needed services go wanting, the Emir and his family bask in the opulent glow of their newly-rebuilt, gold-encrusted royal palace. In short, business as usual.

In Iraq, there appears to be no suffering around Sadaam and his henchmen. The major portion of his army still intact, he continues to plot the destruction of the Kurds while the general populace, especially the children, suffer incredibly from pestilence and want. Now, there is even whispering that some of Sadaam's nuclear capacity remains along with a secret, untouched supply of Scuds.

As to the "window of opportunity" for peace, or at least, movement in the area, the frantic efforts of Secretary of State Baker seem to have produced little or nothing. The Saudis, grateful for all of our assistance in their survival, refused to go along with a peace conference, while Israel and Syria continue to circle each other like gunfighters waiting for someone to "draw." Jordan, of course, wants some kind of initiative to resolve the Palestinian problems, but they were on the wrong side in the Gulf war, so they don't count. Egypt remains stalwart in its search for resolution, but their economy is in deep trouble and the silent rise of militant fundamentalism is a constant threat. The Palestinian "intifada" has turned against itself and the PLO is becoming increasingly factionalized, thus, bringing the prospect of even more terror into the Middle East.

None of this is to say that the crushing of Sadaam Hussein's expansionist dreams was not necessary. The maintenance of a positive balance of power is literally the duty of every large influential nation.

To do otherwise is to commit national suicide. But, our more idealistic notions of liberation, democracy and peace now appear to be expiring in the sand, and the Middle East remains as unsolvable as ever.

to see if someone else was prepared to step forward, but the store was strangely empty. The time had finally come to stop being such a wimp.

Hesitantly, I walked toward the woman. "Excuse me!" I said. She looked at me. I searched her eyes for embarrassment or fear; I found only contempt and impatience. I wasn't exactly sure what to say, so I just said the first thing that came to mind: "Look, I know how frustrating kids can be, but please don't do that - you're going to hurt her."

In a more perfect world, the mother would have looked at me tearfully, thanked me for helping her regain control of herself and explained the devastating reasons for her anger. I would have then referred her to my friend, the family therapist, after which I could have hopped up on my trusty steed and galloped off into the sunset - leaving behind the requisite silver bullet, of course.

Unfortunately, the world isn't perfect. The woman sneered at me and snapped, "Why don't you just mind your own business?" - or words to that effect. Then she took her daughter by the hand stormed away. But as she left, the child looked over her shoulder at me, and I liked to think she silently thanked me for stopping the hurt.

Then again, maybe she was wondering why I didn't do more. As usual, I've thought a lot about that, and I realize now, that there was probably more I could have done, or should have said, or would have followed through on - if only I'd thought of it at the time. Obviously, I've got a lot to learn about responsible involvement.

But, I'm determined to learn it. The good feeling I felt after trying to help - however feeble that attempt was - gives me the courage to try again. And, to do it right, next time. Don't get me wrong, I'm not turning into Batman or anything. I'm just trying to make my little corner of the world a happier place.

And look what I've already accomplished: there's at least one less wimp.

call the United Way's Retired Senior Volunteer Project at 292-0997 or the Area Agency on Aging's information line at 560-2500. They can match your skills and preferences with a need in the community.

But don't stop there. There are also new opportunities for involvement fast approaching with the 1992 elections. As you may know, 1992 will bring us some of the most important elections of the upcoming decade, a president and two U.S. Senators from California will be elected.

Now is the time to get involved. Whether it's participating with a volunteer organization, joining a community group, helping the political party or candidate of your choice, or simply becoming educated on the issues facing your community, remember, you can make a difference!

From Where I Sit Some keen seniors

by Frank Andrews

I have found through my own experience that a workaholic type of person cannot retire from an active business life and become a "sofa spud," proving that the mind controls the physical condition of our bodies.

I promised myself that after nearly a half-century of hard work building for my retirement, I would spend my "twilight days" fishing and seeing my country. Well, it didn't take long for me to catch all the fish and see all the U.S.A. that I wanted.

While I was physically able, I did small odd jobs for our neighbors and friends of the church. Keeping busy, both mentally and physically, kept me fit and free of "brain cobwebs." Every senior citizen should have a reason to get up in the morning whether it's for work or play.

I would highly recommend that older folks write their memoirs as a legacy for their kids and grandkids. How many grandchildren know the history of Grandpa or Grandma? The story can be written by hand, on a typewriter, or as I am doing, on a wordprocessor. Think of all the dreaded, dead time that would consume? There is much needed volunteer work for the retired besides many clubs and organizations to join for fun and a chance to meet friends.

Although many of the local churches are youth-oriented, as it should be, some of the "on the ball" clergymen are encouraging more church activities that involve us seniors. Windsor Hills Church of La Mesa has a very successful monthly get-together for seniors. This project, aptly labeled the "Keenagers," was introduced and "ram-rodged" by Anna Johnson and her faithful, hard-working sidekick, Marty White. The Keenagers had their first luncheon meeting back in March of 1988. The inaugural "blast" drew only eight interested Christians. Now, through lots of hard work and perseverance, the meetings of the very keen, Keenagers average 40 to 50 eager seniors of many different church denominations.

The seniors enjoy a potluck or a scrumptious meal prepared by Chief Chef Dale Henning, who sometimes trades his spatula in on a fiddle for some good old down-home entertainment. Henning is ably assisted by Schmidtman and Boone (sounds like an old vaudeville team). After the delicious luncheon a short devotion time is conducted by Terry Miller, the Windsor Hills pastor, or a member of the Keenagers. Then it's onward into the church sanctuary for more good program, both entertaining and informative.

The Keenagers meet every 2nd Wednesday of the month at noon in the Windsor Hills Baptist Church of La Mesa (just behind Helix High). The cost of the delicious lunch plus some good, clean entertainment is only $1.50. Call Anna Johnson, 469-1361, or Marty White, 469-1870, for reservations.

So come on down - and say "Hi."

One less wimp

For as long as I can remember, I've been a coulda-shoulda-woulda kind of a guy. I can always figure out the perfect thing to say or do - only, I don't think of it until about a week after it happens.

You know the type. If I stumble upon some teenagers trying to steal my hubcaps, my first reaction will probably be to apologize for interrupting their work. A few days later, I'll realize what I coulda done, shoulda said, or woulda been justified in doing - if only I'd thought of it at the time.

Some people call folks like me, "wimps." I prefer to think of us as "cautious reactors."

Which is fine, even helpful, in many situations. But, I'm beginning to see that there are times when we all need to be able to react quickly and decisively to life's drama as it unfolds before us. Indeed, there are occasions when it is wrong for us not to do so.

Like last week. I was shopping for a birthday present when a woman entered the store with her sobbing daughter. The little girl, who looked to be about four, was wailing about wanting to go to "the other store," and the woman responded loudly with harsh words and threats. I felt sorry for the child - but then, she was indeed being pretty obnoxious.

And, anyway, it wasn't my place to get involved in a family dispute, right?

Then the woman hit the girl. Not a quick stroke to the seat of the pants, but a solid blow to her head. It sent the child sprawling, after which she instinctively curled up in a ball. The woman grabbed the girl's hair, dragged her to her feet, took her by the shoulders and shook her angrily, scolding her with vicious oaths, all the while.

My stomach churned at the sight. And yet, I tried to convince myself that it wasn't my place to get involved. I decided to look for a security officer in the mall - until the woman started dragging the screaming child from the store, the girl's neck locked in a strangle-hold and a firm hand covering her mouth. I didn't know what to do. I was outraged by what I saw happening, but my cautious nature resisted forcing myself into the picture. I glanced around

Seniors stay active!

Dear Editor:

If there's one important message I can give to seniors, it's this ... "Just because you turn 65, doesn't mean you have to stop living!"

Seniors around the county are staying active by volunteering their valuable time to worthy causes, and the range of involvement is incredible. Some are involved in programs as wide-reaching as the Senior Legislature, which advocates senior issues in the state capital, while others participate in programs as simple as "10Friends," which brings seniors and children together. In every program I've visited or heard about, seniors are making positive contributions to their community. If you, too, want to get more involved, I would strongly encourage you to

Joe Freed on the Movies

This week's movie: Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves

Warner Brothers is counting on a classic tale to bring in box-office gold this summer, but just to make sure audiences aren't bored by a story that has already been filmed about a dozen times, they've added a few twists to the life of nobleman turned outlaw, Robin of Locksley.

First of all, the story begins during the crusades, and Robin is trapped in a Muslim dungeon. With the help of a fellow prisoner, a Moor called Azeem, Robin escapes and makes it back to England.

Of course, all is not well at home. The Sheriff of Nottingham harshly taxes the poor, and common life is misery. The rest of the film stays true to the legend (except for the odd omission of Prince John), and Robin leads a group of thieves on a mission to rob the rich and feed the poor.

At his best, Kevin Costner is lukewarm as the "dashing rogue" - not at all dashing, and definitely not a rogue. Even in his most sentimental, supposedly uplifting scenes, he is dull and uninspired, a poor American boy lost in the woods. Costner is a Hollywood paradox, a huge star with little acting ability. If you compare his performances in "The Untouchables," "Field of Dreams," and even "Dances With Wolves" you'll see he portrays the same character, simply placed in different settings. "Robin Hood" exposes Costner's lack of range. He can't do an English accent, he's not much of a hero, and he's just plain boring. I think Mr. Costner should stick to directing.

Luckily, the rest of the cast is superb (you can overlook Christian Slater as Will Scarlett, an equally-embarrassing casting decision), and they save the movie. Morgan Freeman provides sophisticated comic relief as the Moor, Azeem, and Alan Rickman adds another perfect villain to his repertoire.

Following in the dastardly footsteps of his nasties in "Die Hard" and "Quigley Down Under," Rickman's Sheriff of Nottingham made me want to hiss at the screen ... something I haven't done since Darth Vader. Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio is good as Maid Marian and Michael McShane is splendid as Friar Tuck.

Director Kevin Reynolds, armed with a $50 million budget, has recreated the look of 12th century England, and the film's action sequences are very entertaining. The script is slow and muddled in the first hour, but screenwriters Pen Densheim and John Watson get things moving in time for the second act. Director of photography, Doug Milsome creates some beautiful images, but the scenes are often too dark (photographically speaking) and it's difficult to see who's fighting who.

Although the film is sure to be a huge success - as of this writing, it's probably already grossed more than most could spend in a lifetime - "Robin Hood" will disappoint you. Not that it isn't a fun movie, but like most summer releases that have been hyped as "fantastic" since fall, it has everything to lose. I enjoyed myself, but I recommend "Prince of Thieves" with reservations.

and that's scary, because innocent bystanders could easily get hit. People I've talked to say these happen on a regular basis; there have been several incidents on file in which the Spring Valley Locos have been shot at on Grand Avenue by another gang; luckily, no one has been hit yet," he added.

According to Guaderrama, gang membership is also on the rise in the Lemon Grove Hispanic gang, the Lemon Grove Locos.

"Four years ago, there were about ten members of this gang, but now, there are about 30 who are claiming membership; it's a much smaller gang than the SV Locos and not growing as fast, but they have been involved in several drive-by shootings," he notes.

When pressed to the reasons why a San Diego gang would have a territorial dispute with a Spring Valley gang, Guaderrama gives an unexpected answer: Girls.

"The girls in the gangs cause a lot of problems; there have been several fights just over girls in the Spring Valley gang dating guys in other gangs," he explained. Also, gang members who attend school outside Spring Valley could incite confrontations by putting their graffiti in that outside area," added Guaderrama.

"If one gang crosses out another gang's graffiti, that is considered an insult and a challenge they have to respond to, and within a short period of time, there will be a fight, a stabbing or a drive-by shooting."

Crimes which are committed by gang members often are related to the attainment of weapons, said Guaderrama: "you have to ask, where do these under-age gang members get weapons - the easiest way is to break into homes and cars and steal them."

Also, "strong-arm" robberies are popular with gangs, according to Guaderrama. "We recently had a rash of those in Lemon Grove in which jackets - the $200 football ones - were being forcibly taken." He notes that Hispanic gangs such as the Locos are not big into money-making from narcotics as heavily as other gangs.

Guaderrama feels the answer to the increase of gang membership and gang activity is the creation of a unit which would tackle the problem, as well as early education discouraging gang membership.

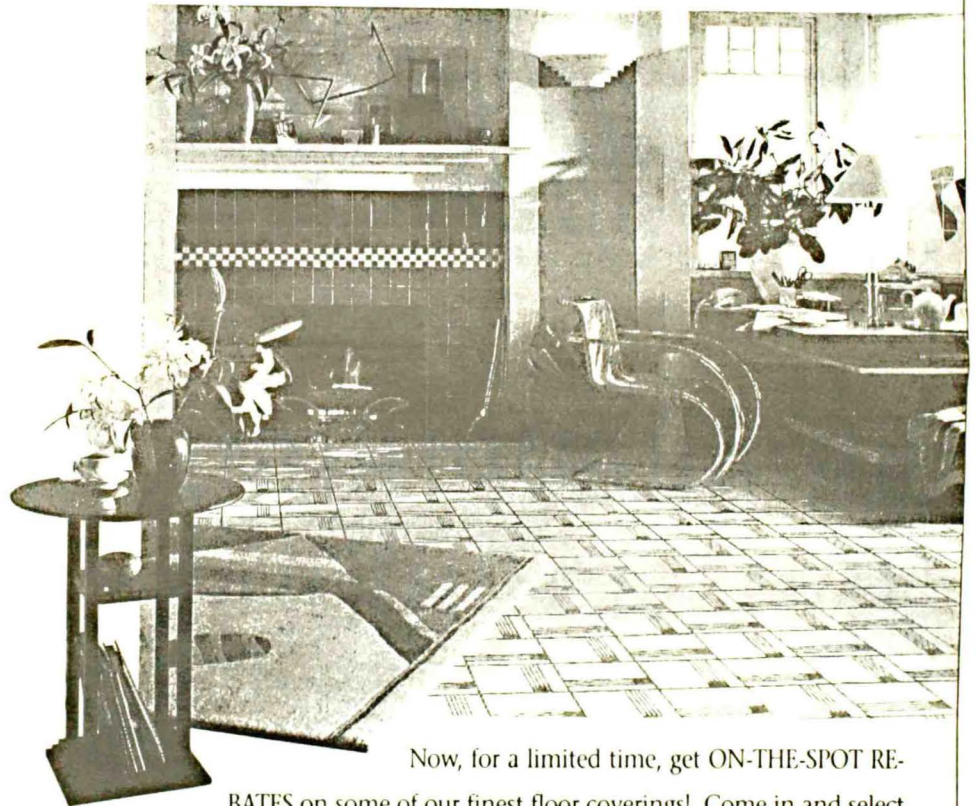

"As with any issue, if you don't have a way of suppressing it, it won't go away; we don't have a gang suppression team in the County, and the gang problem just keeps getting worse."

"To some of these kids, being part of a gang is a way of feeling more socially accepted and of having something to do in their free time; they have to be shown at an early age that there are other activities which will give them feelings of achievement and acceptance," said Guaderrama, "when you live in a gang area, there is always peer pressure to join the gang."

A Sheriff's gang suppression unit would put deputies on gang detail fulltime, however the $1,000,000 cost of the recently-drafted plan may be a stumbling block for the financially-strapped County.

Council adopts 1991-92 Budget

In other business the Council set hearings on July 1st for:

1. Considering the Regional Transportation Improvement Program (a seven year plan of street improvements within the city);

2. Consider the appeal by Lemon Grove Gateway, Ltd. of the results of the yet to be held Planning Commission hearing on their request for signs for major tenants in the new shopping center being built on the corner of College and Federal. Previously the Planning Commission had approved only two of nine requested. Po' Folks and Papa-chinos have allegedly threatened to pull out of the deal if they don't get more signs.

The Council also granted merit increases to Mike Hale, a recreation supervisor employed since December, 1987 and Betty Russell, account Clerk, who has worked for the city since January, 1989.

Charles Gouge appeared before the Council to appeal the Planning Commission's denial of a variance to reduce the required setback in order for him to expand a bedroom and add a bath to his home at 7457 Brunei Court. While praising the Planning Commission's decision and stating that it was a very close call, the Council voted 4-0 (Councilman Burns was out of town) to overrule the Planning Commission and grant the variance.

The Council awarded a bid for traffic signal and street light maintenance to Signal Maintenance, Inc., accepted the completion of the street striping contract, modified the list of management personnel eligible for mileage and then raised the mileage allowance from 22.5¢ per mile to 25¢ per mile.

In a more significant matter, the Council transferred the $17,303 balance of funds not spent in improving Fireman's Park to the Lemon Grove Junior High sports field project, which brings to about $100,000 of the $185,000 needed to do the improvements such as new lights for the softball field, improvements to the tennis courts, lighting the tennis courts, picnic facilities behind the recreation center and other improvements which would enhance the public recreation uses of the school site.

The Council extended the contract with Yellow Cab for Dial-A-Ride service by six months. However they did so grudgingly because of perceived poor service. However, Mr. Palmieri, a Yellow Cab representative was quick to grab the microphone and state that he personally answers all calls from Dial-A-Ride customers, and that he has yet to hear one complaint from either a Lemon Grove customer or the city regarding drivers with poor attitudes towards the program or its customers. Future complaints will be forwarded to the company.

The Council held the first reading of an ordinance to amend the Municipal Code regarding the cost of Business License Processing Fees. The proposed fee of $30, is just below what the city estimates it costs to administer the licensing program.

The previously reported swap of the Eppick Park property on Osage Drive for Boerner property on Lemon Grove Way (near St. John of the Cross Catholic Church) has run into some snags as Boerner's plan to develop the Eppick property with 17 homes has run into higher costs than expected. To keep the plan going, the Council voted to "authorize the City Manager to sign the appropriate escrow documents necessary to proceed with the exchange" - in plain English, to make the necessary concessions in developer and other fees in lieu of cash to keep the deal from collapsing.

In their final action before going into closed session, The Council acted on Special District business and authorized maintenance agreements for both the Lighting and Sanitation Districts.
